NEVADA CITY —

Sportmen's Paradise

WHERE, WHEN and HOW THEY'RE BITING and Other Sportsmen's Items

Rain in the higher level lakes detracted from the fishing last weekend, causing murky waters and driving the fishermen to shelter.

French lake has been reported as the best spot for fishing luck the past week, although Scotts Flat dam continues to be the most popular spot, particularly for the weekend visitors. Fly and bait fishing both have been giving good results at the new lake.

Yuba river fishing has been reported very good this week and prospects appear it will continue so.

Gold and Sardine lakes in Sierra county have been yielding good catches, according to unofficial reports.

Fuller is another lake fishermen report good luck.

Fordyce, always hard to go to, has been excellent fishing since the season opened.

Game Warden and Mrs. Earl Hiscox and son, Irving, returned Monday from a month's trip to the midwestern part of the U. S. Earl reports the trip was not too enjoyable with no fishing, miserable weather, generally cold, mosquitoes and other nuisances. They spent some time in Minnesota and got into the famed muskie and pike country of the Rainy river district of western Ontario.

Many porcupines are being reported this spring. In fact, some old timers say the porkies are the thickest they can ever recall.

Among successful fishermen last week were Jack English of Kings Beach who brought in a 23½ inch four pound mackinaw and a 26½ inch 5¼ pound rainbow. Jimmy Baker and G. D. Waters both have been taking limits of Loch Leven and rainbow from the Truckee river Larry Cardwell of Kings Beach caught two 4½ pound mackinaw last week in the north Tahoe district.

Fred Main reports fishing continues good on the Tahoe Boat Company piers.

Assigned to the quest for more information to provide more fishing, the research vessel "Striper" was commissioned this month by the division of fish and game for duty in the Sacramento-San Joaquin delta and bay areas.

The 28-foot custom-built boat will be used for angler surveys, tagging of salmon and striped bass, pollution control, and general research in inland waters. Another future assignment will be salmon tagging off the Golden Gate.

One man can operate the unique craft by means of three complete control stations and the automatic net return mechanism. Capacity of the drum storage spool is nearly 1200 feet of net.

With an eight-foot beam, the vessel draws three feet of water, and is equipped with a self-bailing cockpit. It is powered with a 110-horse power engine. Sleeping facilities are available for three crew members.

The 13 game farm units of the California Division of Fish and Game have reported a total of 62,600 upland game bird chicks hatched during the first six months of the year.

The factory value of the fishing tackle in 1948 amounted to more than one-fourth of the total value of all other sporting and athletic goods turned out by American manufacturers, according to the census bureau.

California hunters who go south of the border for game may find more equitable possession laws at the state line if plans of the fish and game commission work out.

Commissioner Harvey E. Hastain believes that comparative Mexican and California game limits are lop-sided, to the detriment of good conservation principles. He reports that returning hunters are selling or giving away much of their legal Mexican bag of 15 quail, 25 ducks and geese, 15 doves, and unrestricted numbers of pheasants before crossing the California line.

Commission President William J. Silva disclosed he has contacted Mexcan game officials in an attempt to equalize possession limits. No action will be taken to reduce Mexican limits or up the California bag until an answer is obtained from Silva's inquiry.

The number of commercial fishermen in California reached an all-time high in the license year ending March 31, when 14,255 permits were issued by the division of fish and game.

H. R. Dunbar, chief of the bureau of licenses, reported the record annual sale of market fishermen's permits brought the division a revenue of $142,550. License cost is $10.

State revenue from other types of commercial fish and game licenses sold during the fiscal year: 3252 fish dealer and fish packer licenses, $16,260; 1720 trapping licenses, $1,270; 16 fish importer licenses, $80; 802 sport fishing party boat permits, $802; 112 fish breeder licenses, $560; 590 game breeder licenses, $2,950; 22,138 permits to hold deer meat beyond the post-season deadline, $11,537.

SCALES TIMBER MEN WILL PAY UPKEEP OF YUBA COUNTY ROAD

Scales district timber operators in Sierra county will pay Yuba county five cents per 1,000 board feet of timber moved over an eight mile dirt road into Strawberry valley and thence to the mills.

The Yuba supervisors agreed to maintain the county road out of the Scales timber region on that condition. The deal will be on a cash basis and maintenance will be under the control of Yuba Road Commissioner Brisbane Henderson.

The timber operators, Palace Lumber company, Bowman, Speckert and Cotton interests, will put up $1,500 to start the maintenance work. They will then pay weekly amounts to the county.

Henderson estimated the maintenance would cost upward of $3,500, but the indicated revenue would be about $6,000 for the season.

There will be a stipulation in the formal agreement that any money left over from maintenance will revert to the operators on a prorated basis.

FIVE PERMITS TOTAL $13,500 IN BUILDING

Five building permits totaling $13,500 were issued this past week by P. G. Scadden, Nevada county assessor.

John W. Smith, Grass Valley, $2000 frame home and garage in Wheeler Acres.

Frank J. Weber, Nevada City, $2000 frame home in Wolf Tract.

Earl W. Hile, Grass Valley, $500 frame kennels, McCourtney road.

Albert B. Cornell, Nevada City, $1500 adobe home on Murchie road.

DANCE, PARADE, QUEEN FEATURE RIDGE FESTIVAL

Final arrangements are being made for the annual Cherry Carnival and Centennial Festival tomorrow and Sunday in North San Juan, according to Fred Conner, publicity chairman.

Coronation of the queen will be the highlight of the Cherry Queen ball tomorrow in Twamley Hall. Ed J. Kohler, president of the North San Juan, Camptonville and Vicinity Chamber of Commerce, will crown the queen at 1 a.m., during the dance. Voting for the candidates will continue until midnight tomorrow, Kohler said. Dancing will start at 9 p.m., and continue to the early hours of the morning. Music will be by Arch Brooks' orchesra.

Candidates for the honor of being queen are Margaret Dugan, Lola Estes, Katherine Caston, June Spees, Doris Turner, Jeannie Ennis, and Catherine Stoops.

The queen and runner-up will receive prizes and the other candidates will receive consolation awards. All candidates will receive a percentage of ticket sales. The unsuccessful candidates will compose the queen's court at the festival.

A parade Sunday at 1 o'clock will feature the final day of festivities. Gordon Woods and his pet horse, Ethel, will lead the parade, in his usual annual manner. Participating in the parade will be approximately a dozen floats, pioneer ox carts and other vehicles, Nevada County Sheriff's posse lead by Sheriff Richard W. Hoskins and Captain Bud Kyle, Nevada County Rangers, Redmen, Veterans of Foreign Wars 49er Post of North San Juan, North San Juan Farm Bureau Center, Youth Club, Women's Club of Camptonville, Catholic and Community churches, North San Juan Parent-Teachers association, the chamber of commerce, and the queen and her court. The festival and carnival, given with a 49er theme, is sponsored by the North San Juan, Camptonville and Vicinity Chamber of Commerce. Arthur Atchinson is general chairman.

The carnival is an annual event that dates back approximately ninety years, according to Conner.

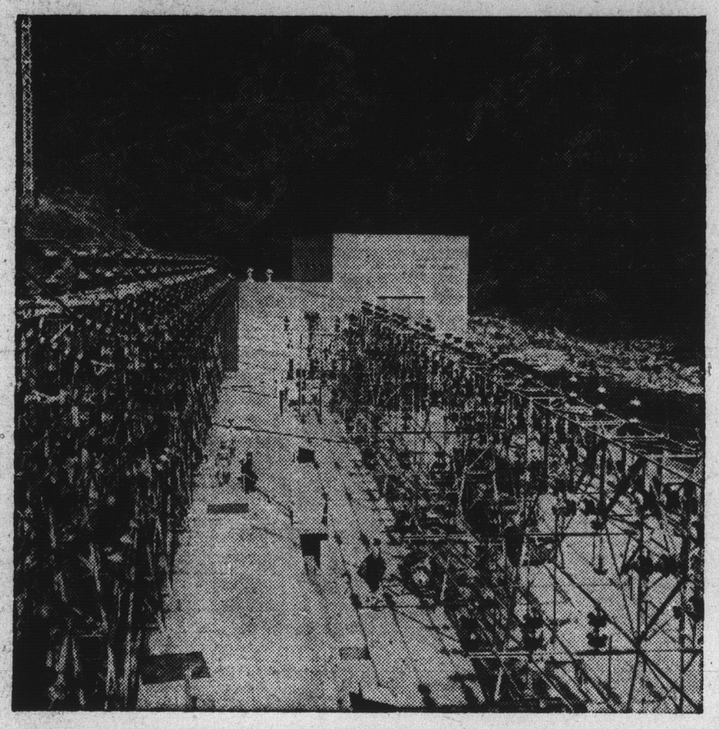
SUIT CHARGES SELLER DID NOT OWN PROPERTY

Charles R. McKibbin filed suit in superior court Wednesday against Pete Andreotti and W. H. Engell asking reimbursement of $1000 payment and damages of $7500, and costs.

McKibbin charges Andreotti on May 23, 1946, sold him timber land in the Bear creek area, 11 miles northwest of Nevada City, that Andreotti did not own. McKibbin, in the complaint, charges he moved a sawmill onto the land preparatory to commencing logging operations. The complaint declares that on July 15, 1946, McKibbin, was informed the property was owned by C. G. and Myrtle B. Dana. The Danas started suit against McKibbin asking $5,000 damages for trespass.

Couple Asks Payment Of Logging Charges

Harold and Georgia Corbett filed suit in superior court against Ray G. Miller, doing business as M. & M. Sawmill, asking for a judgment of $947.62. The plaintiffs charge they dilivered logs to the sawmill to the value of the judgment for which they received no payment. Albert Johnson, Nevada City, is attorney for plaintiffs.



FROM THE NEW COLGATE POWERHOUSE on the north fork of the Yuba river, power from its 40,200-horsepower generator flows through the bus structure (on the left) into transmission lines that serve Nevada City, Grass Valley, Oroville, Allegheny and Bullard's Bar and on major lines to Sacramento and San Francisco Bay points.

GREATER FAIR IS ASSURED BY 17TH DISTRICT

Probably the greatest fair in the history of the 17th Agricultural District association is virtually assured, following revelation of plans and arrangements for an expended Nevada county fair at a special meeting of the fair board members Tuesday evening in Grass Valley.

The Seventh Annual Nevada County Fair is scheduled for Watt park, Grass Valley August 25-28.

Additional entertainment features, and booths for both community and commercial exhibits are assured, according to Loyle Freeman, manager, and Miss Edith Scott, secretary.

Arrangements are underway for appearance at the fair of the Levi Straus puppet show as a free-of-charge feature.

Miss Scott announced Wednesday as the tentative date for a dinner meeting of the fair board members and representatives of Nevada county newspapers at the Deer Creek Inn, Nevada City.

Other members of the board besides Freeman and Miss Scott are Thomas Mulcahy, president; Joel Bierwagen, Thomas Casey, C. Edmunds, Malcolm Hammill, Walter B. Sanford, Vernon Stoll and Leland S. Smith.

NOTICE TO BE FILED BY AUG. 1 TO HOLD MINE CLAIM REQUIRED

The bill granting a moratorium on assessment work for the year July 1, 1948 to July 1, 1949, signed by the President Friday requires every claimant in order to obtain the benefits of the act shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock meridian of Aug. 1, 1949, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under the act.

The law further provides that any labor performed or improvements made on any such mining claim during the year ending July 1, 1949 may be credited against the labor or improvements required by law to be made for the year ending at 12 o'clock meridian on July, 1950. The purpose of this provision is to permit those who did their mining work early for fear a moratorium would not be granted to credit such work on the next assessment year.

ENLISTS IN NAVY

Harlen Leslie Barnes, former P. G. & E. employee here, left this week for San Francisco to complete his enlistment in the U. S. navy, according to F. A. Strang Jr., U. S. navy recruiter for this area.

NINE FOREST WORKERS HONORED AT BONFIRE PROGRAM WEDNESDAY

About 125 visitors attended a program Wednesday night given by the Tahoe national forest service at the Miller ranch, Sierra county, near Camptonville, to complete a three-day annual fire control training school for forest service rangers and personnel. Approximately 75 members of the staff participated in the program, in charge of Ranger Hal Turner and Fire Control Assistant Nelson Stone. Kieth Macdonald was director of the course.

Courses of instruction included orientation of new men, outlining the importance of forest resources and efficient fire prevention and control work; use of fire-fighting equipment, and the construction of fire lines; safety practices in fire fighting; and training in small and large fire maneuvers.

Following entertainment and a program around a huge bonfire service awards were presented to nine employes of the forest service by Robert Dasmann, assistant supervisor. Kieth Macdonald, fire control officer, and Lillian Nygard, clerk in headquarters, were presented 20-year pins and certificates. Ten-year awards were presented to Earl Rickard, Howard Evans, Sam Kasper, Tony Razina, Henry Toccalini, Max Williamson and Ray Worthley.

Macdonald served as master of ceremonies.

President Signs Bill Easing Impeded Mines

President Harry S. Truman Tuesday signed a bill to aid mining claim owners who find it impossible to get to their claims to do the required $100 worth of annual assessment work.

The measure permits the secretary of the interior to suspend such requirements temporarily when owners are denied right-of-way to their claims or where other "legal impediments" prevent them from doing the work.

The law constitutes permanent legislation. The President Friday signed another act suspending all mining assessment work requirements for a period of one year.

HERE FOR SIX WEEKS

Mr. and Mrs. Orlando McCraney and family of San Francisco arrived here Sunday for a six week's sojourn at their home on Washington street. McCraney developed and operated the Murchie mine near here for several years in the 1920's.

THE GOLD QUESTION

We are printing, on the opposite page, through the courtesy of Neil O'Donnell, vice president of the Idaho-Maryland Mines corporation, Grass Valley, a group of letters revealing opposition to the free market gold bills of Senator McCarran and Congressman Clair Engle, by various executive branches of the government.

We are not sufficiently informed on fiscal matters and policies to interpret the letters thoroughly, but it is apparent to us the secretary of the treasury's statement is as befuddled as many of the fiscal policies emanating from the office of John W. Snyder. Snyder's appointment, a reward for political service instead of fiscal knowledge, is of the usual pattern of failures turning to politics for a living. And it is a sad fact that electors often vote these same failures into elective offices from a feeling the candidate needs the job more than his opponent, and to keep the candidate off the public relief rolls.

Of course, government fiscal agencies cannot be expected to admit their managed currency system might be a failure.

William C. McMartin Jr., acting for Snyder in letter sent to Maybank, state in the letter "it would be exceedingly improvident for the United States to sell gold at $35 an ounce to foreign governments if such gold or other could be resold in the United States at premium prices."

We can't quite get the logic of that statement. If the price of gold goes up why should the government sell gold at $35 an ounce?

The government of the Union of South Africa, a commonwealth that produced 55 per cent of the world's gold, in 1948, outside of Russia, recently sold 100,000 ounces of 22-carat gold at $41 an ounce. We would think the U. S. government would sell any of its gold at the current world price of gold and not an arbitarary $35 an ounce.

McMartin states a free gold market resulting in a higher price for gold would devaluate the dollar. We would like to know what the dollar is now if it isn't devaluated. McMartin goes on to say the gold stockpile is necessary to maintain impregnable international strength to the dollar, and then turns around to say the 24 billion dollars of gold holdings is completely inadequate to meet the 167 billion dollars of United States currency and bank deposits, not mentioning government securities and bonds.

If the present pegged price of gold at $35 is necessary to keep the government fiscal policies in a "sound" shape, the treasury department is building its house on sand.

The government's entire mining policy appears to be a refutation of the old axiom "take care of your own." In 1947 and 1948 the treasury bought $3,700,000,00 of gold, and 96 per cent of it came from outside the U. S. And it is our assumption the biggest share of the 96 per cent of foreign gold came from South Africa with labor scales approximately 50 cents a day. What are we doing? Impoverishing our own producers and laborers to support foreignisms that have often proved hostile to us?

Representative Michael J. Kirwan of Ohio recently argued before congress that we are giving billions to foreign countries and letting the United States run down. The Marshall plan calls for the expenditure of $5,000,000,000 for improvements overseas, and at the same time niggardly appropriates $500,000,000 for the department of the interior for improvements in the United States. The congress slashed $6,873,459 from an appropriation for the care of our own displaced and refugee persons—the American Indians, and blithely appropriates $16,000,000 for Arab refugees.

WE DON'T LIKE IT

In reply to an inquiry recently made to the bureau of land management, we discover that this newspaper, although recognized by the post office department for 21 years as a legal publication is not recognized by the bureau of land management as eligible for publication of the bureau's legal notices until we comply with the following requirements: make application to the department for qualifiation, stating our party affiliation, show that the newspaper is of established character and general circulation, has a well-known place of publication, and has been continuously published for an unbroken period of six months, and have applied for and been granted the privilege of transportation by the U. S. mail.

The fact that we have enjoyed second class mailing privilege for 21 years is sufficient proof of every requirement but the party affiliation, and we cannot see what on earth our party afifliation has to do with our legal standing.

Is the bureau of land management another bureaucratic office that considers political standing and affiliation as the principal requisite of doing business with it?

Just Wonderin'

I Wonder if it's really true
That as we think, so we shall be;
I Wonder if it's true of you
And maybe halfway true with me.

"As a man thinketh, so is he. "Those words were spoken long ago, by one of the wise men of old, but I have often wondered if they are really true, or did the wise one simply utter a glittering generality. Of course, we must admit that thinking not only builds our mental, moral and spiritual structure, but it also shapes the ends for which we live. However, thinking if it is to be constructive, must have a foundation of facts upon which to build and some thinking goes sadly awry; we have only to look about us for confirmation of that fact.

Individual thinking which has one's self for the subject is often out of line with reality; we all know people who underestimate their own abilities and others who wear a superiority complex with smug assurance. We say of them, "they have not properly appraised themselves—they are not what they think they are." Is it possible for one to correctly evaluate himself, to see the good and the bad that is inherent in his character and to set about strengthening the good while at the same time eliminating the bad? I Wonder.

The individual with an inflated ego, may be either an object of pity or of scorn and in many cases amusement. Often unpredictable circumstances give a man or woman a temporary sense of superiority—I remember.

We, my husband and I had just come to Nevada City and obtained residence. We were boarding on Grove street and for a time the family car was parked under a high retaining wall. One morning the good man stepped into the car and proceeded to drive toward town; he soon noticed that people along his line of travel were looking at him with wide smiles upon their faces; some were calling to him. A warm glow of satisfaction permeated his entire being. These people he thought were inordinately friendly, he must have made a good impression upon them—they liked him; he had become exceedingly popular over night. He waved to them all and returned smile for smile, then he caught the words shouted to him by one of his supposed admirers; "Fred," yodled the voice, "there's a cat on your car!" Quickly the car was brought to a standstill, the driver stepped out and sure enough, upon the top of the car was a badly frightened kitten, trying with all its might and main to cling to the dangerous position, while at the same time emitting meows of genuine distress. My husband took the frightened little creature from its precarious position, and holding it with left arm, turned the car around with the right hand and took the kitten home to its devoted mistress. So the seeming overflow of friendliness, the seeming crest of popularity were created by the unique vision of a kitten perched upon the top of a moving automobile and expressing abject dissatisfaction.

Sometimes an entire nation suffers from superiority complex and that is funny too. Just now the Russians are busy delving into ancient records and coming up with the assertion that they, the Russians, invented and discovered almost everything long, long before other nations were in the running; but after all the Russians are modest; they may lay claim to the discovery of electricity, wireless telegraphy, radio, etc., but they have have not as yet told us that they discovered the moons of Jupiter, the rings of Saturn or the first binary star. They have not as yet declared that it was they who first observed and diagnosed sun spots and so far, they have not even tried to count the stars in the milky way. These claims may be made later, but just at present, the Russians like the rest of us, are just strolling along the shores of that great ocean called knowledge and also like us, they will probably go on strolling for centuries to come. Poor old Russia, she is suffering from an inflated ego; in the words of Kipling she has "too much ego in her cosmos." It is comforting to reflect that "time cures all things."

GOLD DIGGER'S TRAIL

Charles Scott Haley

I enjoyed my stay with them very much, and still hold them in memory as the real, kindly soul of peasant France.

Our company stayed in the Sarthe Department for several weeks, while the whole battalion was being assembled. I had applied for leave for two weeks to England from Nevers, and it came in, granted, while we were loafing around here. So I packed my musette bag, grabbed a train for Paris, and was soon on my way to Le Havre.

This was my third visit to Paris, by the way; but so much has been written by soldiers on leave fighting the "Battle of Paris", that I do not wish to duplicate the stories which have been written scores of times. Sufficient to say that my experience in Paris were but little different from that of any other officer on leave, except for a few days after I had suffered a dose of mustard gas, and spent several days "hors de combat" in a hospital.

Le Havre was a gloomy old place, to my mind, and smelt of cold stone walls and dank sea spray. Next evening I was embarked on a familiar boat—one on which I had ridden up and down the California coast many times, the old "Yale". But what a difference! Formerly a luxurious passnger steamer, every fitting and every partition had been torn out to make room for bunks for evacuated soldiers. The boat was crowded with Tommies who were returning from the near East, and we Americans were in a minority.

Because this boat and her sister ship, the "Harvard", were very fast, they were assigned to Channel duty without convoy, as they could run rings around anything that was likely to attack them. Later, both boats were restored to Pacific Coast service, and it made me feel happy to see them refitted and comfortable looking again.

After an overnight passage, we landed at Southampton. The first thing that impressed me, that morning in April, when we looked at the British Isles, was the green and beauty of the countryside. Boarding a pint size train which took us up to London at an astonishingly good rate of speed, the next thing I noticed was the little brick cottages which seemed to literally grow in the midst of gardens. I often remember these pictures when I read the line, "Oh, to be in England, now that spring is here." I believe that this line has since been attributed to Hitler.

Arrived in Waterloo station, we were taken in hand by the Red Cross and assigned to a rest camp called Camp Washington which the British had built for American officers on leave near Saint James Square. It was simple, but comfortably built and furnished, and it was good to get a hot shower when you wanted it.

The next few days were spent in exploring the London of Dickens and of Doctor Johnson. The old Fleet Street Inn, with Johnson's chair, the Cheshire Cheese with its nice looking barmaids, and the Old Curiosity Shop, all fascinated me. In the latter place I met one of the partners in a famous candy concern who was establishing a a branch in London. I remember that he told me that his firm annually wrote off ten tons of candy which his employees ate. And I thought of Little Nell.

I had some very good letters in London, and spent a few pleasant hours at West End clubs with delightful hosts. I remember one very charming gentleman who insisted on inviting me to dinner at his home in Portsmouth Square. His wife was a former American girl who had adopted the British traditions heart and soul, as was natural. After the ladies had retired from the table, we sat and drank more Chartreuse and Benedictine than I was accustomed to.

When we returned to the drawing room, my hostess introduced me to her sister, a very lively New York girl with whom I seemed to click. Later on, my hospitable friends got me in a confidential corner and the lady began asking personal questions as to what what my income as an a mining engineer. I modesty replied that it was above six thousand a year—meaning dollars. There was a beaming smile on her face.

A little later, she came back to the subject, "Did you mean six thousand pounds a year?" she remarked, as if to reassure herself.

"No, madam—six thousand dollars a year was my income before I entered the service."

"Oh-o," with that indescribable upward drawing of the accent—for an American born, it was perfectly done—"Is that so. How intrusting!"

Regret shone on her face, and she kept between me and sister like a hen with one chicken for the rest of the evening. Which suited me, as I had a very nice time.

Wandering about the streets of London was a source of never-failing interest. I noticed that the Australian troops would come up and touch our officers for half a crown much more readily that they would their own. I walked past Buckingham palace—in my uniform, of course—and was so tremendously impressed by the salute that I got from two giant Grenadier Guards that I went back several times for more. It made me feel good—this brotherly acknowledgement of what my uniform stood for.

While I was there it so happened that King George himself wandered into an American sailors' rest camp to see what it was like. Four gobs were sitting at a table playing cards intently when he came in, followed by his escort.

One sailor looked up and recognized him. He dropped his cards on the table, got up, and walked over to him with outstretched hand.

What We're Up Against in Washington

Printed below are copies of letters to Burnet R. Maybank, chairman of the senate committee on banking and currency, from various executive agencies of the Federal government relative to the free-market gold bill which was introduced in the senate by Senator McCarran of Nevada, and which had been referred to the banking and currency committee of the senate.

The copies of the letters were furnished us by Neil O'Donnell, executive vice-president, Idaho-Maryland Mines corporeation, Grass Valley.

The letters are indicative of the opposition to the free-market gold bills introduced by McCarran, and Clair Engle, congressman from this district.

The Nugget would like to print letters from its readers replying to these arguments.

Honorable Burnet R. Maybank
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency
United States Senate
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This letter is in further answer to your request dated January 21, 1949, for the views of the Department of Commerce concerning S. 13, a bill

"To permit the sale of gold within the United States, its Territories and possessions, including Alaska, and for other purposes."

The subject matter of this proposal is within the particular purview of the Department of the Treasury and the Federal Board and while the Department of Commerce is generally familiar with the matter we are of the opinion that we could not be of material assistance to the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate in its consideration of S. 13.

Sincerely,

Signed: C. V. Whitney
Acting Secretary
of Commerce

Honorable Burnet R. Maybank,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency
United States Senate
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Chairman:

This refers to your letter of April 25, 1949, to Chairman Mccabe, requesting advice as to the Board's views concerning S. 13 and S. 286, bills relating to transactions in gold.

The purpose of both bills is to permit newly mined or imported gold to be privately held and traded on the open market in the United States and to be exported from the United States, free from any governmental restrictions.

It would appear that a major objective of the proposed legislation is to help the gold mining industry in the United States, which has been subject to rising costs while the price of its produce has been fixed. The mining industry would benefit, of course, only in case the free market price of gold should rise above the present official price. It may be well to mention at the outset, therefore, that it is not certain that the market demand for gold would be adequate to raise the price, at least for an extended period, or perhaps even to maintain the existing price except as a result of official purchases. Moreover, assuming that the mining industry would be benefited, it would seem questionable policy, considering the welfare of the general economy, to encourage a shift of productive resources of this and other countries into gold production to provide gold for hoarding.

There are, however, much more fundamental objections to this proposal. By removing controls over gold ownership and gold trading, the proposed legislation would deprive the Government of a key instrument in the maintenance of international monetary stability, namely, its ability to control gold settlements between this country and foreign countries and thereby to eliminate capricious and speculative gold movements. Also, if the legislation actually resulted in a premium market for gold in this country, the resulting uncertainty as to the gold value of the dollar would seriously impair the usefulness of the International Monetary Fund as a mechanism to develop exchange stability, and the effects of the legislation would be inconsistent with the efforts of this country to promote exchange stability by participation in the Fund. By leading to greater international monetary instability, the proposed action might have serious adverse effects upon international trade.

Moreover, free trade in gold under present circumstances would impair the ability of foreign monetary authorities to maintain confidence in, and stabilize the value of, their national currencies, and thus might retard economic recovery in countries where this is a matter of vital concern to the United States. Demand for gold may be expected from countries where political uncertainties prevail and where the value of local currencies is in question. These use of dollar exchange in foreign countries to purchase gold would reduce the ability of those countries to purchase needed goods from us, and would thus tend to increase the demands for foreign aid under the Economic Cooperation program. While countries which sell gold to the United States would be benefited if the market price for gold in his country rose above the prenent official price, the benefit would bear no relation to the need and, in general, the countries which would benefit the most are not those most in need of financial assistance by the United States.

If the price of gold did not go to a premium, but stayed firmly at the official level, some of the foregoing dangers would be reduced, but the existence of a free gold market would cause serious impairment of the functioning of the Government agencies responsible for monetary and credit policies. At present, the centralization of gold in official hands in the United States permits these agencies to operate in accordance with the basic needs of the country, without the disturbing effects of the speculative movements of gold into and out of monetary reserves which would result from a free gold market. Demand for gold for hoardng is not a reasonable or satisfactory guide to general monetary policies. In periods of depression, as was the case for example in 1933, there may be a strong public demand for gold, the withdrawal of which from monetary reserves might call for restrictive monetary policies, although policies of monetary case are required to combat deflationary pressures. On the other hand, in a period when prices of commodities and other earning assets are tending generally to rise, there may be a shift toward such assets; demand for gold would tend to be small and a free gold market would not act to dampen this kind of price rise.

In a period of more serious inflation, such as may develop during or after a war, there may be a strong demand for gold as some people lose confidence in the maintenance of official parities of currencies relative to gold or other currencies. Should a change then occur in such parities, a free market for gold would have benefited those who had deserted their country's currency and obtained gold, but meanwhile, the free availability of this gold would hinder the financing of the war or reconstruction on as sound a basis as possible.

It may be concluded, therefore, that free circulation of gold is more likely to be a hindrance to the adoption of proper monetary policies than an aid in maintaining stable and prosperous economic conditions.

In view of the foregoing, the Board recommends that favorable consideration not be given to S. 13 and S. 286.

Very truly yours,

Signed: S. R. Carpenter

Honorable Burnet R. Maybank
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency
United States Senate
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Chairman:

This is in further reply to your letters of April 25, 1949, stating that your Committee intends to begin hearings on S. 13 and S. 286 on May 5 and requesting the report of the Department on these bills prior to the date of the hearing.

Both bills specifically authorize the acquisition, trading and export by members of the public of any gold mined in the United States or imported into the United States after their enactment. S. 286 would also replace Sections 3 and 4 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934. Since these sections contain the authority to regulate transactions in gold in the United States, their repeal would permit a free market for all gold. In substance, S. 13 would also result in a free market for all gold since it would not be possible to distinguish newly mined or imported gold from other gold.

The Treasury is strongly opposed to the enactment of these bills. They would create serious risks to our national monetary and banking structure and would result in a weakening of the present strong and stable position of the dollar in its relation to gold. At the same time, the advantages expected by their advocates appear to be based on misunderstanding and illusory hopes.

1. Enactment of either S. 13 or S. 286 would amount to a reversal of the decision made by the Congress in the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, that gold should be held by the Government as a monetary reserve and that it should not be available for private use for other than legitimate industrial, professional or artistic purposes. We believe that the United States should continue to follow the principle that the most important use of gold is for the domestic and international monetary functions of the Government and that gold should not be held by private individuals as a store of wealth.

2. The existence of a free market for gold in the United States with a fluctuating price determined by private demand and supply would have exceedingly unfortunate consequences for our domestic economy. In fact, the Secretary of the Treasury is required by statute to maintain all forms of United States money at a parity with the gold dollar. Since the gold dollar contains 1/35th of an ounce of gold, this means that the Treasury should maintain the price of gold at $35 an ounce in legal gold markets in the United States. Therefore, the Treasury would hardly have any alternative if the proposed bills were enacted other than to sell gold to the extent necessary to maintain the market price at $35 an ounce. Thus, the rise in the price of gold which appears to be contemplated by the proponents of these bills would not take place.

If the Treasury did not take measures to stabilize the market at $35, the shifting of the price of gold could not fail to confuse and disturb the public. The common interpretation of such fluctuations would be that something was wrong with the dollar and that the value of the dollar and all savings stated in dollars were going up and down with each fluctuation,

Such price for gold, however, would probably be the result of a relatively trifling volume of transactions. No significant determination of the value of the whole world supply of gold could be made with the United gold, including the 24.3 billion States Treasury, which is the main factor in the gold market, left out of the balance. Because of popular misconceptions, prices determined by an insignificant volume of transactions would be interpreted as applying to all dollars in gold held by the United States Treasury. Thus, the public misinterpretation of the quotations in the so-called free market might cause a loss of confidence in the dollar and be extremely damaging to our economic welfare.

If the Treasury let the price of gold in the United States fluctuate, it would be defeating the very purpose which have led us to acquire over 24 billion dollars worth of gold. The Treasury has paid out those billions of dollars for gold in order to keep stable the relation between gold and dollar. There would be no clear reason why we should have bought this gold in the past or should continue in the future to buy gold at $35 an ounce if we were not also to be ready to sell it at the same price for any legitimate purpose in order to maintain that stability.

It would be exceedingly improvident for the United States to sell gold at $35 an ounce to foreign governments if such gold or other gold could be re-sold in the United States at premium prices. On the other hand, the Treasury believes it to be the highest monetary importance to the United States that it continue to sell gold to foreign governments and central banks at $35 an ounce whenever the balance of international payments turns in their favor and they ask for settlement in gold. To refuse to make such sales at $35 would be equivalent to the devaluation of the dollar and an abandonment of our adherence to a gold standard. Moreover, if the United States should not continue to buy and sell gold freely for international settlements at $35 an onunce, we could not meet our obligations to the International Monetary Fund without adopting a system of exchange controls to prevent transactions in foreign currencies in the United States at other than official rates.

It should not be assumed, however, that it is at all certain that the proposed free market in gold would result in a marked rise in the price of gold for any extended period even if the Treasury should not stabilize the market at $35. Expectations of substantial increases in price are based on widespread exaggeration of the significance of various premium quotations abroad and inadequate appreciation of the degree to which prices of gold everywhere depend on the readiness of the United States to buy at $35 virtually all gold which is offered to the Treasury. There is also inadequate appreciation of the extent to which gold imports and trading are restricted in every important country in the world and the valid reasons for such restrictions.

3. The international monetary relations and obligations of the United States would also be prejudiced if gold were authorized to be exported and imported freely. One of the dangers of permitting exportations of gold from the United States without restrictions is that much of the gold would flow to black markets abroad. In some countries the gold markets are illegal; in others, gold imports or dollar payments for gold are prohibited. These restrictions are designed to conserve urgently needed dollars to finance essential imports. Permiting gold exports to these markets would work directly against our efforts to restore Europe to financial solvency through the European Recovery Program.

In this connection, the International Monetary Fund has expressed its concern that the international gold transactions at premium prices tend to divert gold from central reserves into private hoards. The Fund has asked its members to take effective action to prevent premium price transactions in gold with other countries or with the nationals of other countres. The existence of a free market in the United States with a fluctuating price for gold, coupled with the repeal of authority to control the export of gold, would make it impossible for the United States to cooperate with the Fund in achieving this objective.

4. Treasury sales of gold to the extent necessary to maintain a $35 price in a free market created by the enactment of either of these bills would in effect mean that any holder of dollars or dollar obligations would be able to convert them into gold. While this would be preferable to an erratic movement in gold prices in the United States, it would force this Government to a course of action which might have extremely serious consequences.

Internal gold convertibility is likely to exert critical pressure at the most dangerous and damaging times and to do little good at other times. It threatened the foundations of our financial structure during the depression and it might have done so again during the last war, yet it has proven of no use either to prevent inflationary booms or serve other desirable purposes at other times. When left in a centralized reserve, our gold stock gives impregnable international strength to the dollar. If our gold stock, on the other hand, were dissipated into immobilized private holdings, our power to maintain the position of the dollar might be critically weakened.

The problems of financing of the last war would have been tremendously magnified if private citizens had been free to draw down our gold reserves. The prosecution of the war, for example, would have been critically hampered if government and business borrowing had been limited because gold hoarders had left no excess reserves in the banking system.

Even our 24 billion dollars of gold holdings would be completely inadequate to meet a serious run on gold from the 27 billion dollars of United States currency in circulation, over 140 billion dollars of bank deposits, and scores of billions of dollars of government securities, not to mention other relatively liquid assets. Conversion of around five or six per cent of these government and bank obligations would be enough to bring the Federal Reserve Banks below their legal minimum gold reserve.

Even in a letter of this length it is not possible to state all the considerations which cause the Treasury to oppose these bills. We believe, however, that the foregoing will give you a general indication of the difficulties and problems which the Treasury considers would arise from the enactment of either of them.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised that there would be no objection to the submission of this report to your committee since the proposed legislation is not in accord with the program of the President.

Very truly yours,

Signed: Wm. McC. Martin, Jr.
Acting Secretary.
of the Treasury.

Hon. Burnet R. Maybank,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency
United States Senate

My dear Senator Maybank:

This is in reply to your requests of January 21 for the reports on S. 13, a bill "To permit the sale of gold within the United States, its territories and possessions, including Alaska," and S. 286, a bill "To remove the restrictions upon the acquisition, possession, and ownership of gold and to permit the sale of gold within the United States, its territories, and possessions, including Alaska."

Since the two sections of S. 286, this report is designed to apply to both bills.

Apparently the primary purpose of these bills is to provide a free market in gold by removing existing restrictions as to possession, price and sales of newly mined gold from domestic sources and from all gold imported into the United States. S. 286 also contains some provisions, not found in S. 13, specifically modifying the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to regulate and control the acquisition, possession, and use of gold by the public.

The paramount interest of the Unitel States in gold is in its monetary aspects and not as a raw mineral commodity. Consequently both bills are largely outside the province of the Department of the Interior. There is, however, one technologic aspect which should be taken into consideration in your final determination or wording of this legislation. The fixed price established for gold during a period when the general price and wage level has risen sharply has inhibited gold production in the United States. Access to a free market for gold producers would probably result in higher net returns and thus would stimulate output particularly from placers and those lode mines that depend on straight gold ore.

Due to the imminence of hearings, this report has not been submitted to the Bureau of the Budget. Therefore, no commitment can be made regarding the relationship of the views expressed herein to the program of the President.

Sincerely,
Signed: J. A. Krug
Secretary of the Interior

May 4, 1949

The Honorable
Burnet R. Maybank, Chairman
Committee on Banking and Currency
United States Senate

My dear Senator Maybank:

Reference is made to Senate Bills 13 and 286, copies of which were enclosed with two letters dated January 21, 1949 from the Staff Director of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, and to your letter of April 25, 1949 on the same subject.

It is noted that both bills would permit newly mined or imported gold to be exported or freely traded on the open market in the United States. One of the bills, S. 286, also provides for the repeal of certain legislation which would conflict with the foregoing objectives. In the remarks that follow I shall attempt to confine myself to the international aspects of the proposed legislation.

For the reasons outlined below, I believe that the enactment of either of these bills would be contrary to the interests and international commitments of the United States.

The establishment of a legal free market for gold in the United States would presumably lead, or at least initially, to trading in gold in this country at a premium over the official price. At the same time, the removal of restrictions upon the export of newly mined or imported gold would presumably stimulate commercial gold exports in response to the even higher premiums likely to prevail in irregular or illegal markets abroad.

Such developments could not fail to give a strong impetus to speculative gold transactions in foreign countries and to undermine the efforts of foreign governments to stabilize the value of their currencies. In many foreign countries where economic conditions are disturbed a premium on gold above its official price is likely to be interpreted as a sign that the currency is weak. If the premium trade in gold can be kept down to a small volume its effect may not be significant, but where it assumes large proportions it may seriously weaken confidence in the value of the national recovery.

Moreover, to the extent that residents of foreign countries acquire gold from the United States for hoarding purposes, such gold will in one way or another be paid for in goods or dollars which otherwise could have been used by the countries concerned to acquire essential commodities. The result would clearly to be to worsen the dollar shortage for foreign countries at a time when the American taxpayer is financing a large part of such shortage through the European Recovery Program.

The effect of the proposed legislation on the value of the United States dollar should also be seriously considered. Because of its strength and stability, the dollar has become the fixed point of reference for international monetary relationships. With a free gold market in the United States the dollar would become subject to fluctuations in terms of gold and to some extent in terms of other currencies. This would occur, not because of changes in underlying economic conditions, but because of the vagaries of speculative activity in one commodity. Such a state of affairs would be prejudicial to the attainment of this country's objectives of a balanced growth of international trade and stable economic relationships.

The proposed legislation would also be contrary to the interests of the United States economy from another point of view. If there were two prices for gold in the United States, countries selling us gold would frequently take advantage, directly or indirectly, of the higher price which would probably prevail on the open market, while countries making official purchases of gold from us would, of course, always do so at the official price. There would also arise the possibility of abuse through arbitrating—i.e., acquiring gold at the official price and reselling it here at a higher price. Thus, even if our gold imports and exports in any given period balanced each other in volume, the United States economy would take a loss on the trade.

Finally, it may be recalled that the International Monetary Fund some time ago addressed a communication to its members strongly deprecating international transactions in gold at premium prices and recommending that its members "take effective action to prevent such transactions . . . with other countries or with the nationals of other countries." The United States is publicly committed to support the Fund in this policy.

Because of the urgency of the matter, the Department has not awaited clearance of this report from the Bureau of the Budget.

Sincerely yours,

For the Secretary of State:

Assistant Secretary

POTTERS WILL TRY TO TAKE NEVADA CITY

The Lincoln Potters, hot and cold team of the Placer-Nevada baseball league, will be guests of the Nevada City Athletic club Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Pioneer park. Marvin Haddy, manager of the local club, says the Athletics will do their best to be rude to their guests and send them home defeated. Lincoln won 12-0 on the Lincoln diamond earlier this year.

The local team has been either extremely hot or frigidly cold, looking like the New York Yankees one week and the Peoria Punks the next. The Athletics go into this crucial game knowing a win will keep them in the running for the Shaughnessy playoffs. The team has a five-five record with eight games left to play.

John Latino, lefthander from Sacramento, will make his first start for the Athletics and either Jake Goldsberry, regular shortstop, or Paul Bernardis will be behind the plate. Fouyer will be unavailable for this game but will be back for the holiday battles with Grass Valley and Colfax.

Babe Childers will hold down the first sack with Haddy on second. Bud Painter at third and Carl Thompson in the shortpatch if Goldsberry goes behind the plate. An infield shift with Bernardis catching would send Jake back to short, Painter to second and Thompson to third.

An outfield shift by Manager Haddy will send Slamming Stanley Jones into left field, Tony Kosinski to center and Chick Faulkner or Haddy in right field. John Grothe and Tony Moreno will be on hand for relief duties, the latter recovering from a serious illness that forced him from the game last Sunday.

Moreno, pitcher and outfielder for the Athletic club, who was stricken with pork poison last Sunday and forced from the game, is out of the hospital and may see action in next Sunday's game. Moreno was lost to the local club for three weeks due to an injured finger and hasn't had much chance to show his ability.

The Nevada City team made a move to strengthen the club by adding Chick Faulkner, Paul Bernardis and John Grothe to the roster.

Faulkner, former pitcher for the Grass Valley Braves, used to make a habit of setting the local team down. Haddy announced he will be used for relief duties on the mound, pinch hitting or outfield duties.

Bernardis, who manages the PSEA softball team, was signed for possible catching duties and will be valuable to the locals on the coaching lines.

Grothe, a lefthander, was bothered with a sore arm early this year, but states it is now cleared up and was returned to the roster of the Athletics.

GRANDSON PLACES SECOND

Bob Potter, grandson of Mrs. Celine Pew of Nevada City, placed second in the 15th annual Farrallone island race last weekend. He sailed Dr. Jesse Carr's Patita II, and came in 1 minute and 19 seconds behind Aldo Allessio's "Mistress." Potter lives in Mill Valley.

It is considered immodest among the tribes of Sumatra and Celebes to expose the knees.

COL. CELIO GRADUATE OF COMMAND SCHOOL

Word was received here this week by Mrs. Katherine Celio, 315 Gethsemane, that her son, Lt. Col. Gove C. Celio Jr., was one of 45 California army officers who were graduated last week from the air command and staff school, the air university, Maxwell air force, Washington, D. C. During the war he served overseas for 41 months with the Ninth air force in the European theater.

The air command and staff school, the second highest educational unit of the air university, is designed to prepare officers for the command of groups and wings and for comparable staff duties. Those eligible to attend the school's regular five-month course, which is given twice each year, are permanent lieutenant colonels and majors of the air force and a quota of army, navy and marine corps officers.

This is the golden text of the Christian Science lesson-sermon for Sunday, June 26. The subject of the sermon is "Christian Science."

The following citations are included in the sermon:

The Bible: "And the scribes and Pharisees watched him, whether he would heal on the sabbath day; that they might find an accusation against him. Then said Jesus unto them, I will ask you one thing; Is it lawful on the sabbath days to do good, or to do evil? to save life, or to destroy it? And looking round about upon them all, he said unto the man, stretch forth thy hand. And he did so: and his hand was restored whole as the other" (Luke 6: 7, 9, 10).

"Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "You can prove for yourself, dear reader, the science of healing, and so ascertain if the author has given you the correct interpretation of scripture" (p. 547).

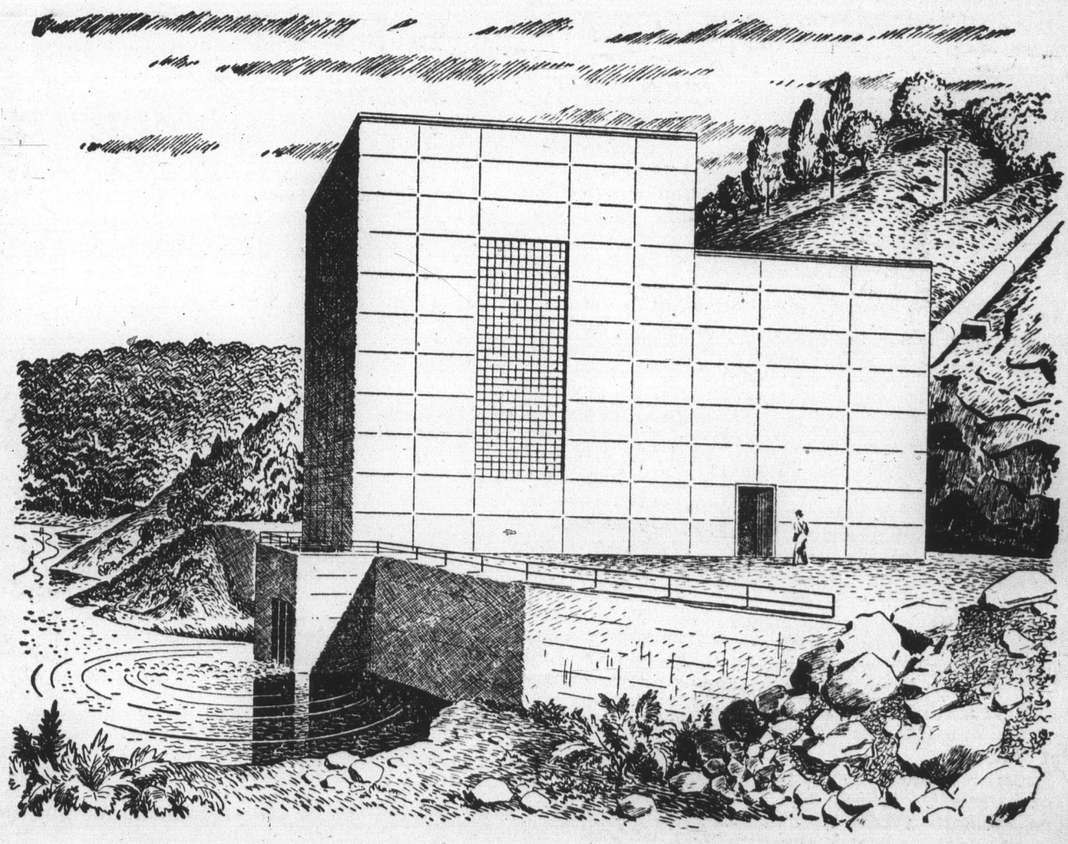
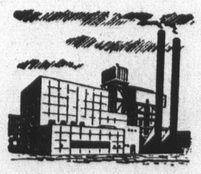
Another P. G. and E. power-producer on the line

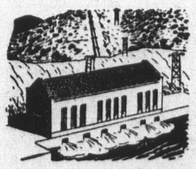


Colgate is fifth plant added to the system in thirteen months

There's new power pouring from the Yuba River today... 40,200 horsepower. A few days ago the tumbling Yuba waters began spinning the generator in P.G. and E.'s new Colgate plant built to replace the pioneer Colgate unit that first supplied Oakland with electricity half a century ago. Colgate is just one of the many powerhouses ...completed or building...in P. G. and E.'s postwar expansion program, which is adding nearly two million horsepower in new generating capacity to our system. In the past thirteen months alone this program has paid big power dividends... a total of almost 600,000 horsepower from five new major plants. In addition to Colgate, they are:



Kern Steam Plant, near Bakersfield, began turning out 101,000 horsepower for California in May, 1948.



Electra Powerhouse, on the Mokelumne River, 133,000 horsepower, came on the line in July, 1948.

West Point Powerhouse, also on the Mokelumne, added another 21,000 horsepower in November. 1948.

Station "P," the steam giant by San Francisco Bay added 298,000 horsepower in February, 1949.

Work never stops on our power-building program

FOOTE'S LIQUOR STORE MOVES TO 227 BROAD

Visited by scores of friends and well-wishers, Carl and Ida Mae Foote opened the doors of their new liquor store Wednesday at 227 Broad street, Nevada City.

Several weeks of preparation were needed to revamp the premises formerly occupied by the Boston Mercantile company. Featured in the planning was a large walk-in refrigerator which will assure correct temperatures for dinner wines, champagnes, and other beverages.

"Special efforts have been made to assist party-planners," says Foote, "including an increased selection of novel 'guest surprisers'—canapes, super-olives tid-bits and food delicacies which are difficult to find. We are always happy to assist in dinner or party arrangements, for we know how much guests appreciate something that's a little different—a little unusual."

A native of Grass Valley, Foote belongs to the Chamber of Commerce, Sportsmen's club, Lions, Rotary, Native Sons, Sheriff's Posse, and Fire Department.

An ardent sportsman, he is frequently called upon by friends and acquaintances for the latest fishing and hunting tips. Mrs. Foote, who came here from Montana in 1932, is also quite expert with fly-rod and rifle.

Spot-lighted for the opening, is a collection of guns, valued at several thousand dollars, which will remain on exhibit for a time.

The commission gave its tentative approval, subject to inspection by O'Conner, to the map of the Spring Hill village subdivision No. 1, near Hills Flat. Clyde Cushwa, president of the Spring Hill corporation, appeared before the commission, accompanied by Carlos McGuire, Grass Valley surveyor.

Cliff Jacobson, first vice president of the Nevada City Lions club, presided at Wednesday evening's meeting at the Deer Creek Inn. Report of the progress of the improvements at Scotts Flat dam highlighted the session.
